

Welcome

This is the first issue of ah! the Accountable Health Newsletter. Once a month we'll:

- Keep you updated on the work Accountable Health is doing and some of the things we have learned
- Provide you with insights on Population Health and how you can leverage it in your healthcare system, practice or company
- Highlight recent guests on the PopHealth Week Show, and
- Let you know which conferences or webinars we will be attending or participating in during the coming month.

Our Recent Work

Accountable Health continues to work with Universities on their operations during COVID. We are beginning to see the impact of the vaccines and how that allows for the consideration of further opening and increased activities at work, in the classroom and with events.

What are we learning?

the rate of vaccinations within their population can change their potential risks. A mixed population of vaccinated and un-vaccinated individuals creates its own unique issues, requiring innovative thinking as one opens their facilities and operations. Thoughtful consideration of the various issues and keeping up with the CDC recommendations are critical.

A PopHealth Insight!

When considering what to "Survey for" in a population health program, consider impactable risks. Survey for those risk areas that your program can address and improve.

Why? Your care management staff will feel overwhelmed and frustrated if they see issues to address from your survey's for which there are no programs or referral sources available. Additionally identifying risks in individuals for which there are no solutions can create undue stress in your patients or members. Seems intuitive but we've seen it.
